AUTOMOTIVE

In spite of the continuous growth recorded in the past years, the automotive industry does show some signs of slowing down.

To succeed in the new automotive environment, suppliers are asked to transform their existing business models and, before that, rethink their overall strategy both to catch new growth opportunities and/or consolidate the market around their existing portfolio.

In order to do so a new company mindset and culture to foster innovation, which is of paramount importance to compete in the new technology areas, will have to be created.

In fact, technology will be at the basis of products and services, also impacting on the organizational structure and governance models that will have to change in order to accompany the transition from the old declining technologies until when they will coexist under the same roof.

Efficient cost base, adequate financing and new partnerships will also have to be put in place and built up in order to start thinking in open innovation ecosystems and implement the upcoming transition.

BETTING AND GAMING

Betting and gaming is a multi-billion business that has proved its resilience and capacity to rapidly adapt to regulation and the mobile era.

Notwithstanding its success, it is a sector that is facing formidable challenges such as:

- The integration of the online and the offline channels, given that the former has grown exponentially as an indispensable tool not only to reach customers but also to provide them with extra services' added value and opportunities to interact with other games, entertainment and players through their mobile devices
- Uneven national legislation and regulation that forces international players to cherry pick their target markets looking at administrative procedures rather than or besides economics
- Taxation levels that are still unsustainably high in many jurisdictions, severely limiting the operational reach of gaming companies but at the same time ensuring that governments maintain control over revenue flows.

The legislation on betting and gaming is one of the areas in which there are significant moral, religious and cultural differences between Member States.

Although Member States are free to set the objectives of their policy on betting and gaming and, where appropriate, define in detail the level of protection sought for their citizens, the restrictive measures that they impose must satisfy the conditions laid down in the case-law of the Court of Justice.

The resulting landscape and global outlook are complex and ever-changing and the business that is at stake is one of formidable size.

De Berti Jacchia Franchini Forlani is one of the few Italian law firms that has developed for two decades a very strong specialization and experience of betting and gaming not only in Italy, but also at the EU level and in other Member States.

FASHION AND LUXURY

Fashion has always expressed Italian excellence in the world, and, despite the economic crisis which began in 2008, keeps developing middle high/high-end products achieving global success.

In Europe, almost half the added value generated in the footwear, leather and textile/clothing industries is provided by Italian firms, and the whole sector is expected to consolidate its recovery in both foreign markets and domestic consumption.

What are the characteristics of the Italian fashion system?

- A highly fragmented supply, which includes small, and even micro enterprises, medium and large firms, as well as top brands of outstanding worldwide repute
- Firms usually specialized in specific productions, in a context where apparently only major players can diversify their activities, upstream as well as down the chain, and a huge number of minor enterprises operate as subcontractors for specific productions or components
- Highly competitive enterprises in all market segments, as a result of strong industrial know-how and quality standards of recognized excellence, and, especially amongst the top players, efficient distribution policies and amazing brand value
- A high degree of competition, mainly based on prices, particularly in the lower market segments, while competition is less visible at the higher ends.

Trends and developments

Supply side, a general restructuring is underway. Particularly in the textile industry, which is experiencing a gradual reduction in the number of players and workforce alike, enterprises more open to change are working on the rationalization of their direct and indirect sales networks and overall strategies, sometimes converting their core business from manufacture to vertical commercialization.

The integration of traditional distribution networks with the new on-line channels, in their always evolving forms, is becoming more and more crucial in the development of all commercial strategies.

Demand side, it is ever more important to develop quality products at attractive prices, as evidenced by the growth of outlet stores and, above all, the booming of e-commerce. Travel retail, which makes shopping a component (and even a driver) of the journey, is steadily increasing as well.

Our Clientele has always included leading companies of the fashion and luxury sector, as well as medium, and even small enterprises and start-ups. All professionals assisting these clients have proven expertise and specific experience of the industry. INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTS AND EQUIPMENT

Dating back from the industrial revolution, nothing has affected the manufacturing industry more than the age of digital mutation.

Consumers have become more and more demanding and their expectations, combined with the advent of connected devices and platforms, represent the key-challenge to corporates who are required to implement and put to use technology to move from mass to customized production.

At the center of this transformation is IoT ("Internet of Things"), that can provide real-time deliveries, but likewise feedback and alert companies to defective or damaged goods.

But besides IoT, also the current trend of automation and data exchange known as Industry 4.0, has widened the vision to interconnected facilities where production equipment is online, and in some way is intelligent and capable of extents of own decision-making. And this is not all. Intelligent robots and the need to take advantage of enormous quantities of data – Big Data Analysis – are two more critical issues the that industrial manufacturers have to deal with. All these factors operate downstream ultimately at the distribution and consumption stages, but necessarily and even before at the upstream levels of projects, manufacturing and supply chain design.

OUR SERVICES

Our Firm has been assisting and advising for numerous years manufacturers and distributors of industrial products and equipment on key aspects of their operations, including in their global expansion and reach.

We worked closely with major manufacturers of, to name a few, metal cutting tools for the mining and automotive industries, access control systems and safety systems for industrial plants, automated ticketing systems across multiple local transit operators, oleo dynamic presses and machines, filtration and ultra-filtration systems, cooking equipment and white goods for household use, medical technology systems, water treatment systems and water solutions and many more, providing assistance and counsel on:

- Decision making processes, functioning of company organs, shareholder agreements and corporate advice
- Retail finance
- Relationships with public and local authorities
- Financial structuring, including at group level through, cross guarantees, negative pledges
- Advice in the setting up and maintenance of multi-jurisdiction distribution agency networks, including in specific regional areas, such as the Middle-East, Africa, Asia and the CIS area comprising the territories of the former Soviet Union
- Competition, compliance and regulatory issues
- Reorganization, restructuring recovery, and insolvency
- Litigation
- Tax.

PHARMACEUTICALS AND LIFE SCIENCES

The advent of the 4.0 industrial revolution is having a significant impact likewise within the life sciences sector, both as far as drugs and medical devices are concerned.

The evolution of scientific studies, placing focus on patients' needs which are not only clinical, along with the implementation of robotized automation processes, require extremely high levels of specialization and expertise; furthermore, manufacturers need to collect and manage big flows of data, which entail dealing with ever increasing material issues.

On top the:

- Expiration of patent protection for traditional blockbuster medicines, which allows generics and biosimilars to widely step into the market
- Urgency of research for new molecules aimed at treating severe and orphan diseases or to step over increasing cases of drug-resistance
- Opinion movements that strongly oppose drugs and vaccinations
- Continuous increase of life expectancy and the exponentially growing number of elderly patients suffering from complex conditions involving log or permanent treatments, with increasingly heavy consequences on healthcare spend, and the correspondingly

- Ever increasing expansion of pharmaceutical spend are, amongst others, some of the major challenges that this delicate sector is actually facing in Italy at the beginning of the third millennium, where primary manufacturers have since a long time deployed a role of excellence in the domestic and international landscape.

OUR SERVICES

Right from its foundation, the Firm became pivotal and is presently rated as a key-played in the life sciences sector, providing a wide-range assistance and advice, and being always responsive to the changes and challenges of the market. Our multi-disciplinary team gained through the years a highly qualified expertise in the sector and is proactively present in addressing all features of pharmaceutical products' lives: from research and development up to access to market, continuously monitoring compliance with the domestic and EU regulatory scenario, marketing authorizations, patent defence and enforcement, compliance with antitrust laws and advertising rules.

We pay special attention to the continuous evolution of technology and the protection of intellectual property: new molecules' registration and protection, license and sale of patents, countering infringements, patent exploitation, patent box. We take specific care of manufacturers involved in litigations filed by consumers because of alleged adverse reactions to drugs and/or vaccines, as well as protecting manufacturers' reputation, which is often under attack by stakeholders groups challenging pharmaceuticals or alleging they are dangerous for human health.

We furthermore provide assistance and advice to devise efficient governance and delegation structures, monitoring in particular mergers and acquisitions, negotiating strategic partnership and joint ventures, with a peculiar focus on compliance with antitrust rules. We, finally, developed broad experience and competence in dealing with the regulatory authorities (European Commission, EMA, Italian Medicines Agency, Ministry of Health, awarding entities of the public tenders for procurements of medicines and medical devices) and any related matter-specific administrative and ordinary litigation.

RAILWAYS, AVIATION AND LOGISTICS

The future of rail appears to be a bright one.

Rising demand for passenger and freight capacity, along with global concerns about climate change, is leading to a global rail renaissance.

Even regions that traditionally had no culture of rail travel, such as the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) countries, or parts of Asia where there has been historical underinvestment, are now investing in rail with enthusiasm.

There are challenges to overcome, not least in building the required capacity in a timely fashion and at a cost that the market can sustain.

Rail will need to focus on being more competitive and placing less reliance on direct public subsidies. Congestion, operational efficiency and reliability, structural and competition issues, and safety and security are other challenges that will need to be faced. Advances in technology will have wide-ranging and unknown impacts.

But we can reasonably expect some major advances as to how railways operate: more driverless trains, real-time monitoring of rolling stock and infrastructure, improved accuracy of passenger information, predictive maintenance planning, and most importantly, seamless journeys integrating with other modes of transport.

According to rail experts (Arup, Future of Rail 2050) passenger and freight rail will form the backbone of the transport system of the future, linking major urban hubs and feeding into multi-modal local transport networks.

Rail services will be able to cross borders without delays or technical barriers, providing a competitive option to air and road travel. As the industry moves towards 2050 and beyond, rail will become increasingly dynamic, innovative, sustainable and competitive.

In the air transport segment, technical developments, new business models and efficiency enhancements have helped absorb inflation which, in combination with raising living standards, have enabled more and more people to fly.

Growth is expected to continue and aircraft manufacturer Airbus forecasts continued healthy annual traffic growth until 2023 of about 5.2% and annual traffic growth of 4.2% from 2023 to 2033.

The profitability of traffic especially within Europe has come under pressure from increased competition and overcapacity. To improve profitability and compete more successfully with Low Cost Carriers (LCCs), airline companies are streamlining operations in parallel with outsourcing an increasing share of short haul operations to proprietary LCCs.

External production models, proprietary LCCs and the use of staffing agencies are increasingly becoming the established industry standard and are changing forever competitive conditions for European aviation. Mergers have characterized the industry in recent years, leading to increased concentration. Hard competition led many airline companies to filing for bankruptcy and leave the market place.

Customised seats, robot cleaners and low cost long-haul are on the radar. Biometrics and AI have already revealed their potentialities: a number of carriers have invested in trials of fingerprint and facial recognition technology as well as in the implementation of AI to provide passengers with automated answers to straightforward questions freeing up the human agents to deal with the more complex enquiries.

AI is also used to assist travellers when they are in an unfamiliar environment and don't speak the local language: technology giants are investing heavily in automated translation technologies, and airports and aircraft could provide ideal environments for these technologies to flourish.

MEDIA AND ENTERTAINMENT

The Media and Entertainment industry is a rich and multifaceted market that comprises businesses engaged in the production and distribution of motion pictures, television programs and commercials, streaming content, music and audio content, broadcasting, radio, publishing, video games and related services and products. It can be partitioned into four main verticals: movie, music, book publishing and video games.

No matter the inner distinction, the whole industry was definitely one of the first to navigate and weather the digital disruption, and the transformation, which is far from over, is now experiencing new uncharted challenges forces – such as virtual reality and the output of artificial intelligence.

According to PWC “2018 Media & Entertainment Outlook,” in a world where the distinctions between print and digital, video games and sports, wireless and fixed Internet access, pay-TV and OTT, and social and traditional media are blurring, being able to have access to right technologies and premium content, and to deliver them in a cost-effective manner to an even larger and more diverse audience will be critical.
